Nachededorne

Site Name	Nachededor	ne	Pre-1974 County	Berkshire
Site Type	Doubtful		Present County
Description	and the Hun later twelfth most probab covered par name repres another man Domesday is lost village of to a deserte	chededorne or 'barethorn' is recorded in Domesday Book as both the name of a manor the Hundred later known as Compton. The Hundred name gave way to 'Compton' by the er twelfth century, whilst the manor name is recorded only in Domesday Book. [1, 2] The st probable explanation is that this manor was amalgamated with that of Compton and ered part of the same settlement, although it has also been suggested that the manor's me represented a scribal error, repeating the name of the Hundred when the name of other manor (e.g. East Ilsley) was intended. [3] Certainly the Nachededorne entry in mesday is for a substantial royal estate of 20 hides, and in the absence of evidence for a stillage or settlement in the vicinity of Compton it seems unlikely that this entry belongs in deserted medieval village.
References	Society: 495 [2] Alexande County of Be [3] Darby, H	Gelling, M. 1974. The Place-Names of Berkshire Part 2. Nottingham: English Place-Name iety: 495.  Alexander, N. 1924. 'Compton', in W. Page and P.H. Ditchfield (eds) A History of the inty of Berkshire. Volume 4: 15-21. London: St Catherine Press.  Darby, H.C. and E.M.J. Campbell (eds) 1971. The Domesday Geography of South-East land. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press: 245 n.2.
Domesday Refere	ence BERN	< 1,24
Domesday minim			Grid_refer	ence	